Acupuncture

Acupuncture is the insertion of needles through the skin to adjust the body's energy. The goal is to alleviate pain, provide relief from a variety of symptoms related to an illness, and support overall health and well being. Side effects from acupuncture may include, but are not limited to: slight bruising, minor bleeding, fainting, and possible aggravation of symptoms. More serious risks or complications, such as pneumothorax, are possible but extremely rare.

Moxibustion

Direct Moxibustion is the application of a protective salve and an herb (usually mugwort) onto the skin. The herb is burned until you feel the heat, in which the herb is then removed from the skin. Moxibustion is done to adjust the body's energy to alleviate pain, provide relief from a variety of symptoms related to an illness, and support overall health and well being.

Indirect Moxibustion is the use of an herbal stick that is burned and held a few inches away from the skin. This herb stick warms the area to adjust the body's energy to alleviate pain, provide relief from a variety of symptoms related to an illness, and support overall health and well being.

Side effects from direct and indirect may include: reddening of the skin, risk of burn, risk of scarring, respiratory aggravation, and possible aggravation of symptoms.

Herbal and Dietary Supplement Treatment

Chinese Herbal and Dietary Supplement is the use of prepared herbs and dietary supplements to alleviate pain, provide relief from a variety of symptoms related to an illness, and support overall health and well being. Side effects from herbal and dietary supplement treatment may include, but are not limited to: digestive complaints, headaches, and possible temporary aggravation of symptoms. If any side effects are felt, you should discontinue the use of herb/supplement and call me to consult on the issue.

Topical Application of Herbs (poultices, medicated pads)

Poultices are a combination of herbs mixed with honey, water, vinegar, or alcohol and then applied topically to the skin. Side effects from poultices may include redness of the skin, swelling, itching, and possible temporary aggravation of symptoms. If any side effects are felt, you should discontinue use of poultice/medicated pad and call me to consult on the issue.

Cupping and Tuina Chinese (medical) Massage

Cupping is the application of suction cups to the skin to alleviate pain, move stagnation, and provide relief from a variety of illnesses such as coughing. Possible side effects may include, but are not limited to local redness, bruising, and minor bleeding, and blistering. Tuina is used to alleviate pain and balance the body's energy. It may cause bruising, discomfort, and possible aggravation of symptoms.

TDP Lamp

The TDP Lamp is designed to provide heat to an area of the body to alleviate pain, provide relief from a variety of symptoms related to an illness, and support overall health and well being. Side effects that may be experienced by the heat lamp include, but are not limited to: reddening of the skin, risk of burn, risk of scarring and possible aggravation of symptoms existing prior to treatment.

If any of the side effects are felt from any of the above explained modalities or techniques, it is important to contact me at (503) 323-0453. I encourage all patients to keep in contact with their Primary Care Physicians at all times during the course of a treatment. There are many other medical alternatives to acupuncture, which include treatment by Primary Care Providers.

_____ (Initial here) the treatment above has been explained to me, I have had the opportunity to ask any questions I have regarding their application, and fully understand the above consent. I understand that I may refuse any of these treatments and discontinue treatment at any time.
